How the Diabetes Community Council made a difference

Almost four years ago, a new group was formed. It was called the Diabetes Community Council. The council was made up of about 20 people, most of whom were elders living with diabetes. The council's goal was to help the community understand how diabetes can affect their lives.

The council met regularly to discuss issues related to diabetes and to share information with each other. They also invited guest speakers to talk about diabetes and its impact on the community. The council's meetings were open to anyone interested in learning more about diabetes.

The council also worked to raise awareness about diabetes in the community. They held events to educate people about diabetes and its prevention. They also worked to change policies that could help people with diabetes.

The council's work paid off. In the years since its formation, the number of people living with diabetes in the community has decreased. And the community has become more aware of diabetes and its impact.

We are grateful to the council for their hard work and dedication.
